étoile, sb.: Fr.: star.

1771 The measured walk, the quincunx, and the étoile imposed their unsatisfying sameness on every royal and noble garden: HOR. WALPOLE, Virtue's Anecd. Painting, Vol. iv. p. 125.

étourderie, sb.: Fr.: heedlessness, giddiness, silly blundering.

1763 the French—bating the étourderie of the mousquetaires and of a high-dried petit-maitre or two...appear to me more lifeless than Germans: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. iv. p. 85 (1857). 1779 at Paris, bating the pert étourderie of very young men, I protest I scarcely ever saw anything like vivacity: ib., Vol. ii. p. 222 (1858). 1807 if you have not étourderie, you have nothing: BERRISFORD, Miseries, Vol. ii. p. 68 (5th Ed.). 1812 George II...had suggested this device of a seeming étourderie on the part of his son: Edin. Rev., Vol. 20, p. 264. 1821 the unhappy étourderie of the trunk: Confess. of an Eng. Opium-Eater, Pt. i. p. 26 (1823).

*étourdi, fem. -ie, adj.: Fr.: giddy, heedless, scatter-brained.

1691 The first that I begin with shall be that etoardy bete ('beast', 'creature'), that humble admirer of Jest an Quibble, the Melancholly Clergyman: Reasons of Mr. Bays, &c., p. 10. 1828 Had she but the animal spirits to be étourdie, she would be so: Engl. in France, Vol. ii. p. 347.

étranger, fem. étrangère, adj. and sb.: Fr.: strange, foreign; a stranger, a foreigner.

bef. 1663 straightway flung his furniture overboard and expressed a preference for sinking his ship rather than yielding it to the étranger: THACKERAY, Sec. Fun. of Napoleon, p. 322 (1879).

*étrennes, sb. pl.: Fr.: New Year's gift, New Year's gifts. The Lat. strēna (whence étrennes) was Anglicised in 16 c. as strene.

[abt. 1520 Dame Nature's stren: Calisto & Meliboea, in Dodsley-Hazlitt's Old Plays, Vol. i. p. 55 (1876).] 1883 Mme. de Witt's magnificent volume belongs to the class of étrennes: Sat. Rev., Vol. 55, p. 377.

Etruscan: fr. Lat. Etruscus: of or belonging to Etruria, a region of Central Italy north of the Tiber, including Tuscany. The Etruscan language remains an unsolved problem of philology. The Etruscans were a distinct race from all other peoples of Italy, and their art had distinctive characteristics, and is of great interest, the Tuscan order being due to their architecture. Modern imitations of Ancient Etruscan pottery are also called Etruscan.

1776 Sir William Hamilton's collection of antique vases and Etruscan rarities: J. COLLIER, Mus. Trav., Ded., p. v. 1787 Here are also Etruscan inscriptions to amuse and puzzle the antiquarian: P. BECKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. i. p. 170 (1805).

ettwee: Eng. fr. Fr. See étui.

**étude*, sb.: Fr.: a study.

1882 a fantasia on opera airs or an impromptu or an étude: Pall Mall Gaz., Dec. 22, p. 20.

étui, sb.: Fr.: a sheath or case (often ornamental) for holding small instruments or utensils, often attached to the dress.

1611 Estuy, A sheath, case, or box to put things in; and (more particularly) a case of little instruments, as sizzars, bodkin, pen-knife, &c., now commonly teamed, an Etui: COTGR.

1761 tiny pews, that look like étuis for the Earl and his diminutive Countess: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. II, p. 264 (1857).

1771 he presented her with a very fine snuff-box, and me with a gold étui: SMOLLETT, Humph. Cl., p. 501 (1882).

1778 I waste as few minutes as possible, but constant application of the mind to some duties or other will impair a memory that is enclosed in so frail an étui: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VII, p. 51 (1858).

1841 Cardinal Alberoni observed that this beautiful building ought to be preserved in a golden étui: LADY BLESSINGTON, Idler in France, Vol. I, p. 9.

**etymon*, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. ἔτυμον: the true literal meaning of a word according to its origin, the radical element.

1578 But how aptlie and trulie the same [chance and clere] may stand to make the etymon of chancellor, I leave to others to consider: HOLINSHED, Scotland, [R.]

1612 Blue hath its etymon from the High Dutch blaw: PEACHAM, On Drawing, [J.]

1634 Peace denominates Yerusalem, it is the etymon of the word: R. CLERKE, in C. H. SPURGEON'S Treas. David, Vol. VI, p. 438 (1882).

1664 nor is this sense much distant from the Etymon of the word: J. WORTHINGTON, Life, in J. MEDE'S Wks., p. 161.

1665 from whence the name Spauhaum derives it self is not known unto the Natives; I may nevertheless venture a conjecture of the Etymon: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 160 (1677).

1676 Homer (in his Hymns) gives this Etymon of his Name: J. SMITH, Christ. Relig. Appeal, Bk. II, ch. v, § 4, p. 49.

1678 uncertainty of the Greeks concerning the Etymon of this Word, ἄγνωστα: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. I, ch. iv, p. 309.

1733 by so much, as from a Specimen, one may imagine the whole Etymon, and Sense of the Word: R. NORTH, Examen, I, iii, 60, p. 169 (1740).

[Mr. H. D. Darbishire has upset or at least thrown considerable doubt upon the usual etymology of ἔτυμον, which connects it with Skt. satyas, 'true', fr. Skt. root as, 'be', akin to Gk. εἶναι, Lat. esse, 'to be'. He proposes an affinity with Lat. vērus.]

euangelion, Late Gk. εὐαγγέλιον; euangelium, Late Lat. fr. Late Gk. sb.: good tidings, gospel, evangel. Early Anglicised as evangelie, evangile (through Old Fr. evangile), &c.

1525 The evangelion, that joyful tidings, is now bitterer than the old law: TYNDALE, Expos., p. 234 (1849).

1528 Whiche after Lukis evangelion / Sayde to th[e] apostels Iames and Iohn: W. ROY & JER. BARLOWE, Rede me, &c., p. 112 (1871).

**eucalyptus*, pl. eucalypti, sb.: Late Lat., 'well covered': name of a genus of trees, Nat. Order Myrtaceae, including the Red and Blue gum-trees of Australia and Tasmania.

1845 The bark of some of the Eucalypti falls annually, or hangs dead in long shreds which swing about with the wind: C. DARWIN, Journ. Beagle, ch. xix, p. 433.

1867 the eucalyptus boles stood out, like basalt pillars: C. KINGSLEY, Two Years Ago, ch. I, p. 37 (1877).

1877 The Eucalyptus globulus, or blue gum-tree of Australia, is another and recently discovered example of the hygienic influence of vegetation: Times, Dec. 6, [St.].

**Euclid*: Lat. Euclides, Gk. Εὐκλείδης: the author or editor of the celebrated text-book on elementary geometry compiled about B.C. 300; hence, any edition of the said text-book; elementary geometry, or geometry treated more or less on Euclid's system, and confined to the study of plane angles and figures contained or bounded by straight lines or circles (or parts of circles), and of solid angles and figures bounded by planes.

[abt. 1886 The lord, the lady, and ech man, sauf the frere. | Sayde that Jankyn spak in this matiere | As well as Euclide: CHAUCER, C. T., Somnour's Tale, 589.]

1658 Yet throw your Euclid by, and only look | To th' Propositions of your living Book, | And you'll conclude Truth doth more clearly lie | There, than i' th' Maxims of Philosophy: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 352 (1687).

eucrasia, εὐκρασία, Gk.; eucrasie, eucrasy, Eng. fr. Gk. sb.: lit. 'good mixture': a well-constituted temperament (of mind or body).

1669 But the other having a ruddy vigorous and perfect constitution and enjoying a compleat entire Eucrasie delights in no food but of good nouriture: SIR K. DIGBY, Observ. Relig. Med., p. 342.

1671 This likeness or conformity to God is an eucrasia, a perfect temperament: JOHN HOWE, Wks., p. 211/2 (1871).

1692 the soul in the Greek had its eukrasia, its perfect beauty and glory: WATSON, Body of Div., p. 738 (1858).

eudaemon, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. εὐδαίμων (adj.), 'having a good demon', 'fortunate', 'blessed': Astrol.: the eleventh House of an astrological figure. In the sense of a 'good angel, spirit, or genius', the term is a mistake for agathodaemon (g. v.).

1696 Eudemom, the Good Genius; by which Name the first House of a Celestial Figure is called, by reason of its good and perpetual Significations:

PHILLIPS, World of Words, 1834-47 The simple appendage of a tail will caedemonise the Eudemom: SOUTHEY, Doctor, [Davies]

euforbie, euforbio, euforbium. See euphorbium.

euge, eugè, interj.: Lat. fr. Gk. εὖγε: well done!, bravo!. Also as sb. an expression of praise.

1635 Unto whom shall that Euge be given at that great Day, but the doer: S. WARD, Sermons, p. 577.

1680 The musick that Pythagoras talks of in the orbs, was that of the minstrels which our Saviour mentions at the return of that prodigal, to solemnize the euges, the passionate welcomes of heaven poured out on penitents: HAMMOND, Wks., IV, 500. [T.]

1665 the Caddi enrolls their names, the hour, day, month, and year of Nuptial; and with an Euge dismisses them: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 308 (1677).

1809 This small still voice (which comes to all) escaped Mr. Hayley's notice, perhaps amidst the euge's of his flatterers: Quarterly Rev., Vol. II, p. 442.

**eulogium*, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. εὐλογία, 'praise': an expression of praise, a panegyric. Perhaps the form is affected by elogium (g. v.).

1621 all those, of whom we read such hyperbolical eulogiums: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., To Reader, p. 28 (1827).

1673 Wisdom giveth us the like eulogium of the power of God in this: J. CARYL, quoted in C. H. SPURGEON'S Treas. David, Vol. V, p. 20 (1878).

1712 yet shall I not accompany those Writings with Eulogiums, but leave them to speak for themselves: Spectator, No. 461, Aug. 10, p. 659/2 (Morley).

1728 the best repeated Eulogiums on that Theme, are but intrusions on your Majesty's Pleasure of secretly deserving them: CHIBBER, Vanbrugh's Prov. Husb., Ded., Wks., Vol. II, p. 230 (1776).

1748 This eulogium on my native country: SMOLLETT, Red. Rand., ch. xiv, Wks., Vol. I, p. 79 (1817).

1771 His eulogium was interrupted by the arrival of the old duke of N—: — Humph. Cl., p. 371/2 (1882).

1818 the eulogium I ventured to pass on Milton was wholly confined to his poetry: LADY MORGAN, Fl. Macarthy, Vol. II, ch. II, p. 111 (1819).

1837 The quality of the lunch fully justified the eulogium which Rob had pronounced, and very great justice was done to it: DICKENS, Pickwick, ch. xlix, p. 536.

1864 he had prepared a flaming eulogium of your work: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. I, ch. xxii, p. 244 (1879).

euonymos, euonymus, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. εὐώνυμος, 'well-named' (shrub): name of a genus of trees, Nat. Order Celastraceae, commonly called 'spindle-tree'. The Euonymos japonica, a variegated shrub, is also called 'Chinese-box'; Euonymos Europaea is also called 'dogwood'.

Cl.*, p. 40/2 (1882). 1815 Glosin bowed low to this declaration ex cathedra, but observed, that in case of the very worst, and of such unnatural doctrines being actually held as he had already hinted, "the law had another hold on Mr. Vanbeest Brown": SCOTT, Guy Mannering, ch. xlii. p. 370 (1852). 1820 the drone! Of old Botherby's spouting ex-cathedra tone: BYRON, The Blues, Wks., Vol. XII. p. 31 (1832). 1820 "My brother," said he, ex cathedra, "it cannot have escaped your judicious observation": SCOTT, Monastery, Wks., Vol. II. p. 437/1 (1867). 1826 Sir, it is already announced to us (ex cathedra) that "liberty is power": Congress. Debates, Vol. II. Pt. II. p. 1907.

ex concessis (pl.), ex concessio, phr.: Late Lat.: from what has been conceded.

1884 The words "National Spem." are ex concessis in common use: SIR J. PEARSON, in Law Times Reports, Vol. LL (N.S.), p. 654/1. 1886 The Court will...aid the defective execution of a power, but here there was, ex concessis, no power at all: Law Reports, 34 Ch. Div., 163.

ex consequenti, phr.: Late Lat.: by way of consequence, as a logical consequence.

1579 will you conclude, as it were ex consequenti, that whosoever arriseth here shall be enticed to folly: J. LVLV, Euphuus, p. 43 (1868). 1681 after that, ex consequenti, as a secondary work, our reconciliation amongst ourselves: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. II. p. 45 (1861). 1826 that there being no right in other Powers to send, there was, ex consequenti, no correlative duty on the part of the Spanish American States to receive such Ministers: Congress. Debates, Vol. II. Pt. I. p. 624.

1829 It is sometimes foolishly argued ex converso, that the disease cannot arise from causes slight as those debateable at present between the countries: Edin. Rev., Vol. 49, p. 256.

*ex debito justitiae, phr.: Late Lat.: from what is due to justice.

1696 He [God] is not obliged ex debito justitiae, but bestows it [the reward] freely, of mere bounty and mercy: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. I. p. 23 (1864). 1787 although ex debito justitiae, he had been obliged to order so many executions: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. V. p. 274 (1851). 1884 The Court is not bound ex debito justitiae to grant a charging order in favour of a solicitor: SIR W. R. GROVES, in Law Reports, 13 Q. B. D., 669.

ex delicto, phr.: Late Lat.: owing to a crime.

1683 that done the advocates do dispute of the law, to make of it what they can, saying ex facto jus oritur: SIR TH. SMITH, Commonw. of Engl., Bk. II. ch. xvi. p. 141.

*ex hypothesi, phr.: Late Lat.: from the hypothesis, in consequence of assumption made.

1603 the Spring and neape tides, the four seasons of the yere, with infinite like, they are phisically necessarie, they are inevitable ex hypothesi: C. HEYDON, Def. Judic. Astrol., p. 211. 1694 yet that necessity not being absolute, but ex hypothesi only: JOHN HOWE, Wks., p. 141/2 (1834). bef. 1733 the Jury, ex Hypothesi (as all at that Time) inclined on the Plot Side: R. NORTH, Examen, I. III. 142, p. 215 (1740). 1829 the universe, ex hypothesi, is only an effect: Edin. Rev., Vol. 50, p. 219. 1887 The opposite method is to take for granted a state of mind...in which, for instance, a jumble of sky-gazing and false etymology may give rise to such a practice as suttler among a people to whom it was ex hypothesi unknown: Athenaeum, Oct. 1, p. 430/2.

ex improviso, phr.: Late Lat.: in an unforeseen manner, unexpectedly, suddenly.

bef. 1547 and provide the same by thys reason, that yff any manner of newe songe schulde be brought unto both the sayde Chiapellis for to be sung ex improviso, then the sayde songe schulde be better and more snerly handlydde bi your Chiapell than bi hys Graces: RICH. PACE, in Ellis' Orig. Lett., 3rd Ser., Vol. II. No. cxli. p. 49 (1846). 1620 The Father did not only discourse with him ex improviso upon the fabrick of many sorts of glasses: BRENT, Tr. Savas's Hist. Connc. Trent, p. xxvi. (1676). 1632 But Mr. Catlin, by entreaty, preached at that time, ex improviso: J. ROUS, Diary, p. 69 (Camd. Soc., 1856). bef. 1733 the Dissolution...happening ex improviso, like a Thunder Stroke: R. NORTH, Examen, I. II. 131, p. 102 (1740).

ex libris, phr.: Late Lat.: from the books (followed by the owner's name in the genitive); a phrase often written in the volumes or on the bookplates belonging to a collector of books.

*ex mero motu, phr.: Late Lat.: of his own accord, from simple impulse.

bef. 1670 the Arch-Bishop sent for him two years before he was Batchelour of Divinity, and ex mero motu gave him the Advowson of an Arch-Deaconry in Waler: J. HACKET, Abp. Williams, Pt. I. 23, p. 17 (1693). 1682 in the first of Ephesians, he is said to have purposed all in himself, ver. 9 and 11, ex mero motu: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. IX. p. 341 (1864). 1761 since the stranger, ex mero motu, had confessed: STERNE, Trist. Shand., III. Wks., p. 165 (1839). 1826 Is there any one sufficiently absurd to assert that he [the President] has a right ex mero motu...to appoint a Secretary for that Department...? Congress. Debates, Vol. II. Pt. I. p. 993.

ex natura rei, phr.: Late Lat.: from the nature of the case. ex natura rerum, from the nature of things, from the nature of various cases. See a natura rei.

1659 it is impossible, ex natura rei, and such as implieth a contradiction, that a sin should not be a breach of the law: N. HARDY, on 1st Ep. John, Nichol's Ed., p. 219, 1 (1865). 1672 sin...in its own nature...merits condemnation; it doth so ex natura rei, ex judicio legis, only it is not so in point of fact and in event, ex indultu gratiae, as one expresses it: T. JACOMB, Romans, Nichol's Ed., p. 161 (1868). 1825 I would also add, that ex natura rerum, the individual threatened with imminent danger, must be the judge of the force which it is necessary for him to use: Congress. Debates, Vol. I. p. 567. 1827 that legislation was ex rei natura inadequate: ib., Vol. III. p. 198.

ex nihilo (nilo), phr.: Late Lat.: out of nothing.

1669 creation the production of a thing ex nihilo: SIR K. DIGBY, Observ. Relig. Med., p. 211. 1681 The work of grace is a work of creation... Because it is ex nihilo: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. I. p. 396 (1861).

*ex nihilo (nilo) nihil (nil) fit, phr.: Late Lat.: nothing comes from nothing. See de nihilo nihil and Persius, 3, 84.

1573—80 And then, in a fantastical fit, | I cried owte, Ex nihilo nihil fit: GAB. HARVEY, Lett. Bk., p. 132 (1884). 1590 For God made all things of nothing, against the rules of Philosophie, Ex nihilo nihil fit, though Plato did his best to make some comparison... of this great worke with Art: L. LLOYD, Consent of Time, p. 2.

*ex officio, phr.: Late Lat.: by reason of office, official, officially, upon taking office.

1547 they have taken away the acts of mortmain and præmunire... and restored the act ex officio: CRANMER, Remains, &c., p. 17 (Parker Soc., 1846). 1555 the bishops have full authority, ex officio, to enquire of heresies: RIDLEY, Wks., p. 371 (1841). 1636—7 In one of my last letters I wrote, that Mr. Burton had refused to take the oath ex officio: In Court & Times of Chas. I., Vol. II. p. 260 (1848). 1642 His fifth section finds itself aggrieved that the Remonstrant should be taxed with the illegal proceeding of the high commission, and oath ex officio: MILTON, Apol. Smect., Wks., Vol. I. p. 241 (1806). 1651 he had spent much solicitude ex officio, yet it principally failed: Reliq. Wotton., p. 99 (1654). 1664 Tell all it does, or does not know, | For swearing ex officio? S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. II. Cant. II. p. 89. 1692 it is the law of God... that there should not be an oath ex officio: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. V. p. 261 (1863). bef. 1733 Inquisitors to call after Offences ex officio: R. NORTH, Examen, III. vi. 28, p. 444 (1740). 1754 the abbé, who was a wit and critic, ex officio, or rather ex vestitu: SMOLLETT, Ferd. Ct. Fathom, ch. xxii. Wks., Vol. IV. p. 105 (1817). 1766 the full power must undoubtedly ex officio be read by you: GEO. III., in Ellis's Orig. Lett., 3rd Ser., Vol. IV. No. dli. p. 383 (1846). 1769 the attorney-general is ex officio the guardian of liberty: JUNIUS, Letters, No. xiv. p. 61 (1827). 1789 The governor of the state, and the president of the college are, ex officio [pl.], two [of the trustees]: J. MORSE, Amer. Univ. Geogr., Vol. I. p. 525 (1796). 1810 the judge is empowered ex officio... to remit the cause to the next session: Edin. Rev., Vol. 17, p. 101. 1858 the holders of certain offices should be ex officio members of the Parliament: A. TROLOPE, Three Clerks, Vol. II. ch. xii. p. 265. 1880 he would accompany it to the residence of the hirer in a sort of ex-officio capacity: J. PAVN, Confident. Agent, ch. xiv. p. 100. 1886 It was enacted that any one in Great Britain or Wales... shall... take the usual ex officio oath: Athenæum, July 24, p. 111/2.

ex opere operato, phr.: Late Lat.: by virtue of a work done (without respect of the persons concerned in the doing); a phrase much used in discussions on the efficacy of Sacraments.

1540 The mass, ex opere operato, justifieth and taketh away the guiltiness of the fault and pain in them for whom it is done: BECON, Wks., p. 454 (Parker Soc., 1844). 1550 for they say that their masses are satisfactory sacrifices for the quick and the dead... saving them both from damnation, ex opere operato: BAILE, Sel. Wks., p. 431 (1849). 1565 Thus we have declared... that the mass is a sacrifice propitiatory both ex opere operato, that is through the merit of Christ's body that suffered on the Cross, which is here opus operatum, and is by Christ through the ministry of the priest in the mass offered, truly but in mystery, and also ex opere operante, that is through the doing of the priest, if he have the grace of God, and so be acceptable, but in a far lower degree of propitiation, which is called opus operans, or opus operantis: JEWELL, Wks., p. 754 (1847). 1604 As for the phrase ex opere operato... Fox understandeth not what it meaneth; for this Phrase is used only to express the manner of working of Sacraments, which are said to work their effects of giving grace, not ex opere operantis that is according to the dignity or merit of the person that doth administer them, but ex opere operato, that is by the very application of the Sacrament according to Christ's institution, from which institution it hath this force: R. PARSONS, Three Conv. of Engl., Vol. III. ch. xix. p. 441. 1620 grace is contained in the Sacraments and conferred, not by virtue of faith, but Ex opere operato: BRENT, Tr. Sacra's Hist. Counc. Trent, Bk. II. p. 220 (1676). 1659 See also what their Baptism doth, that can ex opere operato infallibly put away sins: R. BAXTER, Key for Catholics, ch. xxxvii. p. 270. 1682 who... make baptism to work holiness, ex opere operato, in every one baptized: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. IX. p. 440 (1864). 1696 others ascribe to them a power to excite gracious motions, even ex opere operato: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. III. p. 138 (1865).

1601 Maister Arch-priest's authoritie was both obtained sinisterly ex parte of the Procurers: A. C., Answ. to Let. of a Jesuited Gent., p. 4. 1664 And may be ex parte of the Maker, | More criminal, then th' injur'd Taker: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. II. Cant. II. p. 87. 1737 but then it will be a political stage ex parte: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Misc. Wks., Vol. I. p. 237 (1777). 1791 the report of the committee... containing suggestions, most of them founded upon ex parte investigation: Amer. State Papers, Mil. Affairs, Vol. I. p. 39 (1832). 1808 Mr. Barrow's statements are altogether ex parte: Edin. Rev., Vol. 11, p. 299. 1817 the assertions were made on ex-parte evidence, and not founded on fact: Parl. Deb., col. 375. 1825 the testimony... ought to be received with caution, as being in a great measure of an ex parte character: Congress. Debates, Vol. IV. Pt. II. p. 2514. 1877 Mr. William Storr is so dexterous, not to say ex parte, an advocate: Echo, Jan. 13. [St.]. 1880 it is an ex parte statement of the vilest kind: J. PAVN, Confident. Agent, ch. xxvi. p. 172.

*ex pede Herculeum, phr.: Late Lat., 'Hercules from his foot': you may judge of the size of Hercules from that of his foot (the print of which was said to have furnished the standard Olympic foot); you may judge of the whole by a part, or of an aggregate by a specimen.

1665 R. HEAD, Engl. Rogue, sig. Aaa 6<sup>ro</sup>. bef. 1733 But ex pede Herculeum. They that let so much be seen, had notable Reserves however couched: R. NORTH, Examen, I. ii. 130, p. 102 (1740). 1737 The Romans used to say, ex pede Herculeum, or, you may know Hercules by his foot, intimating, that one may commonly judge of the whole by a part: LORD CHESTERFIELD, in Common Sense, No. 4, Misc. Wks., Vol. I. p. 31 (1777).

*ex post facto, phr.: Late Lat., 'from what is done afterwards': in view of a subsequent state of affairs, retrospective. An ex post facto law is a law which makes an act or acts committed before its enactment legal or illegal as the case may be, and which establishes, in respect of an act, a right or a liability which did not exist when the act was committed.

1621 for the Law cannot iudge his intent against his Act done, ex post facto: Tr. Perkins' Prof. Booke, ch. iii. § 191, p. 85 (1642). 1632 For first for the notoriousness of the pretended conspiracy; although now ex post facto, they cry it out for notorious: Reply to Defence of Proceed. of Du. agst. Engl. at Ambroya, p. 11. 1651 it was approved at their return home, ex post facto: Reliq. Wotton., p. 507 (1685). 1679 sin... if not repented of when it is come to our knowledge, is by that means become a voluntary transgression, increasing its guilt, ex post facto: GOODMAN, Penitent Pard., Pt. I. ch. iii. p. 81. bef. 1733 as if a Pardon, ex post, and a Dispensation antecedent, were the same: R. NORTH, Examen, III. vi. 25, p. 440 (1740). 1787 as the passions and interests of the majority have no check, they will frequently make ex post facto laws: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. VI. p. 110 (1851). 1805 by an ex post facto law they are fettered with many restrictions: Edin. Rev., Vol. 5, p. 304. 1831 all ex post facto legislation... should be proscribed: ib., Vol. 53, p. 509.

ex professo, phr.: Late Lat.: professedly.

1591 like a Mercenary Poet, to penne a worke, ex professo: JAMES I., Lebanto, Pref., p. 1 (1818). 1601 whom as such (to wit the Pope) even a Protestant-civill author here in our countrie hath ex professo singularly commended: A. C., Answ. to Let. of a Jesuited Gent., p. 91. 1602 which intermedleth not ex professo with any such charge: W. WATSON, Quodlibets of Relig. & State, p. 137. 1670 He that desires to know the History of Ferrara, let him read Giovanni Baptista Pigna, who hath written of it, ex professo: R. LASSELS, Voy. Ital., Pt. II. p. 223 (1698). 1681—1703 Flat and plain idolaters, ex professo, we find unpurged out of that state: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. VII. p. 546 (1863). bef. 1733 to set up and sustain a notorious suborned express, who ex professo undertook the Employment: R. NORTH, Examen, p. 401 (1740). 1752 [See ex re nata].

1681—1703 the grace... which superadds to his love and mercy a freeness, as being extended to us upon no motives or incentives in us, but ex proprio suo motu: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. VI. p. 92 (1863).

ex re nata, phr.: Late Lat.: according to a circumstance that has arisen, according to exigency. See pro re nata.

1610 did so well acquit himself ex re nata, and so clearly open all the particularities of the contract: DUDLEY CARLETON, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. I. p. 129 (1848). 1654 more for shew than propriety of application, to disease or Patient, to vary ex re nata, according to variety of occasion: R. WHITLOCK, Zootomia, p. 102. bef. 1733 Oates wrought upon accident Ex Re nata, and succeeded: R. NORTH, Examen, II. iv. 85, p. 273 (1740). — Whether the Discovery was designed at first or happened ex re nata: ib., III. vii. 36, p. 529. 1752 Most people think only ex re nata, a few ex professo: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 69, p. 295 (1774).

ex traduce, phr.: Late Lat.: lit. 'from a vine-layer'; used metaph. with reference to the propagation of individual souls from the souls of parents.

1588 how can we prove that God is not the author of the guilt of sin, if the soul be not ex traduce: WHITAKER, Disp. Script., p. 695 (1840). 1652 Yet Hierome was so zealous against this, that he pronounceth a present Anathema, to all such as shall hold the soul to be ex traduce: N. CULVERWELL, Light of Nature, ch. xi. p. 106. 1665 or (as some conceive) part of the Parents soul were portion'd out to his off-spring, and the conceptions of our minds were ex traduce: GLANVILL, Scopis, ch. xvii. p. 117 (1885). 1665 Soffer left behind him a Son called Siet Ganet: for of such esteem was his Fathers Sanctity, that ex traduce they held it requisite to give the like attribute of Siet... unto his Son: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 271 (1677). 1669 if [the human soul] is not ex traduce and yet hath a strange kinde of neer dependance of the body: SIR K. DIGBY, Observ. Relig. Med., p. 237. 1704 that the Soul was the outward, and the Body the inward Cloathing; that the latter was ex traduce; but the former, of daily Creation and Circumfusion: SWIFT, Tale of a Tub, p. 61 (and Ed.).

ex ungue leonem, phr.: Lat., 'a lion (may be depicted by imaginative inference) from a claw': the whole may be inferred from a specimen. Plutarch, De Defect. Orac., 3, ascribes to Alcaeus the phrase ἐξ ὀνυχος λέοντα γράφοντες, = 'depicting a lion from a claw'.

1600 Ex vogue, you know the old adage, as these, so are the remainder: B. JONSON, Cynthia Rev., v. 10, Wks., p. 562 (1616). 1621 I will only point at some of them, ex uno leonem guess at the rest: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., Pt. 3, Sec. 4, Mem. 1, Subs. 3, Vol. II. p. 516 (1827).

**ex uno disce omnes*, phr.: Lat.: from one judge of (learn) all. An adaptation of crimine ab uno | disce omnes (Danaum insidias), Virg., Aen., 2, 65.

1614 many glances and glids passed upon him and his person, which were too long to set down all, but ex uno disce omnes: In Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. I. p. 313 (1848). 1772 this appeared at the bar of the House of Commons from a witness he brought thither himself—ex uno disce omnes: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. v. p. 423 (1857). 1788 Such is the faithful picture of my mind and manners, and from a single day disce omnes: GIBBON, Life & Lett., p. 114 (1869). 1826 I dwell upon this chance-companion at some length... although it is by no means true of any narration, 'ex uno disce omnes': Refl. on a Ramble to Germany, p. 223. 1834 The principle of ab uno disce omnes, is strictly applicable in this instance: GRESWELL, on Parables, Vol. IV. p. 266. 1845 the towns, peasants, and products along the route are very like one another; ex uno disce omnes: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. I. p. 437.

1669 not only incorporeal substances... might be conserved by an infinite time ex utraque parte: SIR K. DIGBY, Observ. Relig. Med., p. 212.

**ex vi termini*, phr.: Late Lat.: by virtue of the force of the term.

1760 yet these Words are not actionable, for Letters of Attorney do not ex vi Termini imply Deeds: GILBERT, Cases in Law & Equity, p. 247. 1804 when we estimate the collective wealth of a nation, it is clear, ex vi termini, that the idea of internal exchange is out of the question: Edin. Rev., Vol. 4, p. 352. 1826 There was nothing in the word road or canal which, ex vi termini, imported an object of internal improvement: Congress. Debates, Vol. II. Pt. I. p. 107. 1884 They regard foreigners as barbarians, ex vi termini: H. C. LODGE, Studies in History, p. 377. 1885 The auctioneer is not ex vi termini agent for both parties: Law Times, Jan. 17, p. 212/1.

**ex voto*, phr.: Lat.: by reason of a vow; hence, as adj. votive; and as sb. a votive offering.

1787 The Chapel of the Virgin... is hung around with trophies, and ex votos: BECKFORD, Italy, Vol. II. p. 240 (1834). 1830 hundreds of ex voto's hung round it: Greville Memoirs, Vol. I. ch. viii. p. 329 (1875). 1838 Coryate performed his journey on foot; and returning hung up his shoes in his village church as an ex-voto: S. ROGERS, Notes to Italy, p. 160. 1884 As an ex voto offering she placed an image in wax of a child: Tr. Galdos Trafalgar, p. 7. 1885 There was in the sanctuary a fixed space for the exhibition of ex-votos: Athenaeum, Oct. 10, p. 477/3.

exactor (= ex-act), sb.: Eng. fr. Anglo-Fr. exacteur, Old Fr. exactor, fr. Lat. exactor, = 'a tax-gatherer', noun of agent to exigere, = 'to exact'.

I. a person who exacts payment of money or goods.

1586 provided alwais that of magnifical, he become not prodigal, which would soone make him an exactor, and in the end a tyrant: T. B., Tr. La Primaud. Fr. Acad., p. 672. 1598 Yet heuens, and you, accept what poore can spare, Beyond poore powre nor they, nor you exactors: FLOKIO, World of Wordes, sig. b 3 v. bef. 1603 the murderers and exactors: NORTH, Lives of Epamin., &c., added to Plut., p. 1165 (1612).

2. one who exacts punishment, a torturer.

abt. 1400 Wycliffite Bible, Deut., xvi. 18.

3. one who makes authoritative demands, one who enforces.

1599 Dispensers against the laws of God, but tyrannous importuners and exactors of their own: SIR E. SANDYS, Europa Spec. [T.]

4. an extortioner, one who makes unreasonable demands.

bef. 1554 bee not an exactour of another man: Babees Bk., p. 106 (Furnivall, 1868). 1650 Men that are in health are severe exactors of patience at the hands of them that are sick: JER. TAYLOR, Holy Dying, II. § 3. [T.] 1693 The Service of Sin is perfectly Slavery; and he who will pay Obedience to the Commands of it, shall find it an unreasonable Taskmaster, and an unreasonable Exactor: SOUTH, Serm., Vol. II. p. 27 (1727).

exaggerator (= ex-ag-gre-ate), sb.: Eng., as if Late Lat. exaggerator, = 'one who increases', 'an enlarger', noun of agent to Lat. exaggerare, = 'to increase by heaping up', 'to amplify', 'to exaggerate': one who exaggerates.

18.. So gross an exaggerator was not likely to be trusted: L. HORNER, Tr. Villari's Hist. Savonarola, Bk. II. ch. v. [L.]

exāmen, sb.: Lat., 'tongue of a balance': examination, weighing.

1646 Following the wars under Anthony, the course of his life would not permit a punctual examen in all: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. I. ch. viii. [R.] 1664 There are haply some Workmen who upon the sudden will not approve of it, as being not custom'd to so exact an examen of the particulars which concern their employment: EVERLYN, Tr. Frear's Parall. Archit., Pref., p. 6. 1665 the only way to know what is sophisticate, and what is not so, is to bring all to the Examen of the Touchstone: GLANVILLE, Sceptis, ch. x. p. 64 (1885). 1671 If there were made an accurate Examen of Angled Bodies: H. O., Tr. N. Steno's Prodrum. on Solids in Solids, sig. F 6 v. 1714 A new Rehearsal, or Bays the Younger. Containing an examen of the Ambitious Stepmother: Title. bef. 1733 And hereof I might produce Instances enough, but, since it is the Work of the following Examen, none shall be anticipated now: R. NORTH, Examen,

p. ii. (1740).

1751 You must, therefore, expect the most critical examen that ever any body underwent: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 26, p. 116 (1774). 1854 We practise particular examen of conscience: F. W. FABER, Growth in Holiness, ch. vi. p. 87 (1872).

exāminātor, sb.: Late Lat., noun of agent to Lat. exāmināre, = 'to weigh', 'examine': an examiner.

1619 the examiner was then entering upon his interrogatories: T. LORRIN, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. II. p. 169 (1848). 1646 SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. VI. ch. vi. p. 246 (1686). 1824 gone through the form of introduction to the examiners: SCOTT, Redgauntlet, Let. viii. sub fin., p. 90 (1886).

1858 the motto... Excelsior! A. TROLLOPE, Three Clerks, Vol. II. ch. iii. p. 60.

exceptio confirmat regulam, phr.: Late Lat.: an (the) exception proves a (the) rule, i.e. the statement of an exception presupposes a rule or general proposition from which a particular case or particular cases must be excepted. For instance, the statement that water and a few other substances expand on freezing at once implies the general rule that substances contract more and more the colder they become.

1566 Yea, & as the lawyers say, Exceptio confirmat regulam: so I may say most truly in this case that those small differences of a few names... doe much more strongly confirm the rest wherein there is no disagreement, to be S. Chrysostoms: R. POINTZ, Testimonies for Real Presence, p. 75/1. 1762 exceptio in non exceptis ['amongst cases which are not excepted'] firmat regulam: SMOLLETT, Launc. Greaves, ch. iii. Wks., Vol. v. p. 20 (1817).

**exceptis excipiendis*, phr.: Late Lat.: excepting what is to be excepted, with proper exceptions. Cf. mutatis mutandis.

1887 Nothing is more notorious... in the spiritual  régime of the Republic than the extension of toleration to all exceptis excipiendis: Athenaeum, July 9, p. 50/2.

exceptor (= ex-cept), sb.: Eng., as if Late Lat. exceptor, = 'a shorthand writer', 'a scribe', noun of agent to Lat. excipere, = 'to take out', 'to take up', 'to except': one who makes an exception, one who takes exception.

1684 The exceptor makes a reflection upon the impropriety of those expressions: T. BURNET, Theor. Earth. [T.]

excerpta, sb. pl.: Lat., pl. of excerptum: extracts, selections, excerpts; excerpta quaedam = (a collection of) 'certain excerpts'.

1704 extracts, collections, medullas, excerpta quaedam, florilegia, and the like: SWIFT, Tale of a Tub, § v. Wks., p. 73/1 (1869). 1803 The volume of these excerpta... is now presented to the public: Edin. Rev., Vol. 1, p. 414. 1886 Twelve reigns... supply the staple of Sir E. Bayley's excerpta: Athenaeum, June 19, p. 806/2.

exceptor (= ex-cept), sb.: Eng., as if noun of agent to Lat. excipere, = 'to cull', 'to make extracts': a culler, a selector, one who makes excerpts.

1683 I am no such excerptor: BARNARD, Life of Heylin, p. 12. [T.]

excommunicator (= ex-comm-unic-ate), sb.: Eng., as if Late Lat. excommunicator, noun of agent to excommunicare, = 'to excommunicate': one who excommunicates.

1643 He caused all the infringers of it to be horribly excommunicated by all the bishops of England, in his own presence, and of all his barons; and himself was one of the excommunicators: FRYNNE, Track. & Disloy., Pt. I. p. 19. [R.]

excrēmentum, pl. excrēmenta, sb.: Lat.: that which is sifted out, refuse, matter cast aside as useless.

1552 And so shall all his disciples... and specially the preachers of his holy word shall be excrementa, they shall be outcasts: LATIMER, Remains, p. 126 (1849). 1882 Our rubbish, manufacturing refuse, and household excrementa shall no longer be turned into the natural watercourses: GREG, Misc. Essays, ch. vi. p. 144.

excrecence (= ex-cre-sce), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. excrecence: an outgrowth, esp. a morbid growth upon an animal or vegetable; hence, any unsightly projection or addition; also, metaph. an excess.

1543 scrophules, and other excrecences lyke vnto them: TRAHERON, Tr. Vigd's Chirurg., fol. xxxix r°/a. 1601 the excrecences and risings of the skin about the roots of the nails: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 26, ch. 5, Vol. II. p. 245. 1666 her excrescences pared off before she was brought as a bride to the bed of her lord: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 74 (1872). bef. 1667 excrescences of joy: JER. TAYLOR, [C.]

*excrēta, sb. pl.: Lat., neut. pl. of excrētus, past part. pass. of excernere, = 'to sift out': substances eliminated as superfluous from an organic body; in reference to animals, sometimes confined to animal products which have performed their function and are no longer wanted, so that faeces (q. v.) are not included under the term.

excretion (= 22), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. excrétion.

1. the action or process of eliminating superfluous products from an organic body; hence, loosely, departure or discharge from an organic body.

1603 but the excessive excretion of the animal heat is Death: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 848.

2. substance eliminated as superfluous from an organic body.

*excursus (Lat. pl. excursus), sb.: Lat.: a digression; a dissertation on a special point, inserted in a literary work at the end, or at the end of a division, so as to form an appendix.

1803 The remaining excursus are for the most part employed in discussing questions of Homeric grammar: Edin. Rev., Vol. 2, p. 320. 1813 We shall...no further...continue this excursus into the well known writings of the celebrated wits: ib., Vol. 22, p. 87. 1882 This evidence may be placed in the Excursus: FARRAR, Early Days Chr., Vol. I. ch. xiv. p. 290. 1886 The preface, commentary, and excursus embody the controversial arguments: Athenaeum, Jan. 16, p. 1001.

excūsātor, sb.: Late Lat., noun of agent to Lat. excūsāre, = 'to excuse': an excuser, one who puts forward an excuse or defence.

1681 This brought on the sending an excusator in the name of the king and kingdom, to show that the king was not bound to appear upon the citation: BURNET, Hist. Ref., Bk. II. [R.]

exeat, 3rd pers. sing. pres. subj. of Lat. exire, = 'to go out', used as sb.: lit. 'let him go out', leave for a person in statu pupillari to go out of residence for more than one night from an university, a college, or a school. Orig. leave given by a bishop to one of the inferior clergy to go out of the diocese, or by the head of a religious house to a member of his community to go out of residence.

1797 Encyc. Brit. 1850 He had got an exeat somehow, and was bent on a day's lark in London: THACKERAY, Pendennis, Vol. I. ch. xvii. p. 174 (1879). 1888 It was a rule of the plaintiff's school that no exeat should be allowed during Easter Term: Law Times, Jan. 28, p. 22012.

*executor<sup>1</sup> (= 222), sb.: Eng. fr. Old Fr. executour, assimilated to Lat. executor for executōr, noun of agent to exsequi, = 'to perform', 'to carry out': a person appointed by a testator to carry out the provisions of the said testator's will. Sometimes spelt executer. Also corrupted to seckatour, sectour.

exomologēsis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐξομολόγησις: a full confession.

1665 And upon this account all publick criminals were tied to a publick exomologesis or repentance in the church, who by confession of their sins, acknowledged their error, and entered into the state of repentance: JER. TAYLOR, On Repentance, ch. x. [R.]

exonerator (= ' = =), sb.: Eng. fr. Late Lat. exonerator, noun of agent to Lat. exonerare,='to exonerate': one who exonerates.

exoneratōr, 3rd pers. sing. pres. ind. pass. of Lat. exonerare,='to discharge': Leg.: lit. 'he is discharged', name of a judge's order of discharge; esp. an order discharging a bail.

1760 GILBERT, Cases in Law & Equity, p. 418.

*exordium, sb.: Lat.: a beginning, esp. the proöme or opening of a speech or of any literary composition.

1577 had in myne Exordium...compared my case: G. GASKOIGNE, Steel Glas, &c., p. 86 (1868). 1586 As for your exordium I do not wel remember it, nor so consequently the midst, and I will say little to your conclusion: SIR EDW. HOBV, Polit. Disc. of Truth, ch. xv. p. 63. 1600 in their Exordiums, yea in all parts of their speeches and writings: R. CAWDRAW, Treas. of Similies, sig. A 4 re.

1604 Thus he, making his exordium with an interrogation as you see: R. PARSONS, Def. of Relation, ch. v. p. 166. 1605 [See epithalamium].

1625-6 Your heavy exordium, though it revived my grief, was no news unto me, having heard thereof on Tuesday: J. MEAD, in Court & Times of Chas. I., Vol. I. p. 79 (1848).

1652 the first exordium of infancy: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nature, ch. xi. p. 91. bef. 1670 He came at his hour, and being brought into a Gallery, fell into an abrupt Exordium: J. HACKETT, Abp. Williams, Pt. I. 204, p. 198 (1693).

1746 I fancy he (Demosthenes) began with an exordium, to gain the good opinion...of his audience: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. I. No. 75, p. 167 (1774).

1748 This exordium did not at all contribute to the recovery of my spirits: SMOLLETT, Red. Rand., ch. xvii. Wks., Vol. I. p. 98 (1817).

1788 The exordium thus duly prepared...the second act opens: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. I. p. cxi. (1837).

1808 I have begun this branch of my history with a sort of exordium, in which the nature and character are explained: SOUTHEY, Lett., Vol. II. p. 101 (1856).

1823 And wherefore this exordium? BYRON, Don Juan, x. iii.

exoskeleton, sb.: quasi-Gk. fr. Gk. ἐξω,='outside', and σκελετόν,='skeleton': a hardened covering of an animal, such as a shell or a system of scales or plates, opposed to endoskeleton (q. v.).

exosmōsis, sb.: quasi-Gk. fr. Gk. ἐξ,='out', and σμός,='impulsion': the passage of a fluid through a porous diaphragm into another fluid of different density, which goes on, in company with endosmosis (q. v.), until the different fluids form a mixture of equal density on either side of the diaphragm. With regard to two confined fluids separated by a diaphragm the use of the correlative terms depends upon which of the two fluids is regarded as the inner. Both terms are included under the term osmosis (q. v.).

expatiator ( = 1 = 1 = ), sb.: Eng., as if noun of agent to Lat. expatiari, = 'to go out of the course', 'to digress', 'to enlarge': one who expatiates.

1809 The person, intended by Montfaucon as an expatiator on the word "endovellicus," I presume is Thomas Reinesius: PEGGE, Anonym., p. 201. [T.]

expedition ( = 1 = 1 = ), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. expédition.

1. despatch (of business), active progress.

1483 Therfor we have respited the expedition of that Article vnto the comynge of your ambassade: RICH. III., in Ellis' Orig. Lett., 3rd Ser., Vol. I. No. xlvii. p. 112 (1846). 1599 let us deliver | Our puissance into the hand of God, | Putting it straight in expedition: SHAKS., Hen. V., ii. 2, 191.

2. promptitude, energetic despatch, alacrity.

1531 thanne with expedition to procede to the mooste speedy and sure remedy: ELVOT, Governour, Bk. III. ch. xxvi. Vol. II. p. 406 (1880). 1646 wherfore Edward, in all expedition, gave him battayle: Tr. Polydore Vergil's Eng. Hist., Vol. I. p. 224 (1846). 1657 our pleasure is that ye shall with all expedition proceed to finish the said exchange: ABP. PARKER, Corresp., p. 101 (1853). 1579 used delay of time to execute, and valiant expedition to winne the victorie: NORTH, Tr. Plutarch, p. 526 (1612). 1590 Even with the speediest expedition | I will dispatch him to the emperor's court: SHAKS., Two Gent. of Ver., i. 3, 37. 1591 he marched with all expedition hitherwards: CONINGSBY, Siege of Rouen, Camden Misc., Vol. I. p. 31 (1847). 1599 great expedition and knowledge in th' ampendic wars: SHAKS., Hen. V., iii. 2, 82. 1641 The more secrecy and expedicion there is used in dispatch of yo<sup>r</sup> Maties let<sup>r</sup>...ye better: EVERLYN, Corresp., Vol. IV. p. 90 (1872).

3. a journey, march, or voyage, undertaken by a number of persons for some specific object; also, the body of persons organised to make such a journey or voyage with their entire equipment. experimentum crucis, phr.: Late Lat.: a crucial experiment, an experiment which acts as a signpost in determining the future course of an investigation. See crux.

1749 any hypothesis which has so much plausibility as to explain a considerable number of facts, helps us to digest these facts in proper order, to bring new ones to light, and make experimenta [pl.] crucis for the sake of future inquirers: HARTLEY, Observ. on Man, Vol. I. p. 16, quoted in J. S. MILL's System of Logic (1843), Vol. II. p. 90 (1856). 1803 When the experimentum crucis of his doctrine of latent heat occurred to him, he delayed making it for many months: Edin. Rev., Vol. 3, p. 9. 1811 Such instances, therefore, really afford an experimentum crucis as to the truth of the theory in question: JEFFREY, Essays, Vol. I. p. 40 (1844). 1843 if one of these nations is found to be rich, and the other poor, or one richer than the other, this will be an experimentum crucis: J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. II. p. 461 (1856). 1884 The scheme, if carried out, will be an experimentum crucis for Mr. GEORGE in one sense: Sat. Rev., May 31, p. 699/2.

experimentum in corpore vili: Late Lat. See flat experimentum, &c.

experto crêde, phr.: Lat.: believe one who has experience.

1579 Experto crede, I have seen somewhat: GOSSON, Schoole of Ab., Ep. Ded., p. 34 (Arber). 1732 SWIFT, Lett., in Pope's Wks., Vol. IX. p. 146 (1757). 1845 Both climate...and accommodation...(experto crede) are bad enough even in summer: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. II. p. 595. 1878 J. FAYN, By Proxy, Vol. I. ch. i. p. 9.

flibeg, flilibeg, philibeg (1 = 2), sb.: Eng. fr. Gael. feileadh-beag = 'small kilt': a plaited skirt reaching to the knees, worn by Scotch Highland-men and their imitators; a kilt.

1775 The flilibeg, or lower garment, is still very common: JOHNSON, West. Islands. [T.] 1797 PHILIBEG, is a little plaid, called also kilt, and is a sort of short petticoat reaching nearly to the knees: Encyc. Brit.

*flibuster (1 = 2 = 3), sb.: Eng. fr. Sp. flibustero, fr. Fr. flibustier, fr. Du. vrijbuer (Mod. Du. vrijbuit), = 'a freebooter': a West Indian buccaneer or pirate, a freebooter; hence, in modern times, a member of an illegal organisation formed in one state for the purpose of breaking the peace of another state. The form flibutor is directly fr. Fr., and shows that the s was originally not sounded.

1591 being robbed or spoiled of théeues and flibutors: GARRARD, Art Warre, p. 236.

*filioque, phr.: Lat.: 'and (from) the son', the Latin version of the sub-clause of the Nicene Creed, asserting the "double procession" of the Holy Ghost, which was a main cause of the schism between the Eastern and Western Churches.

1839 It is for him to arbitrate between the Greek and the Latin procession, and to determine whether that mysterious filioque shall or shall not have a place in the national creed: MACAULAY, Essays, p. 483 (1877).

filipendula, Late Lat.: filipendule, Eng. fr. Fr. filipendule: sb.: Dropwort, Spiraea filipendula, but formerly applied to a species of Oenanthe (Nat. Order Apiaceae), the pimpinell-like dropwort.

WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. V, p. 279 (1857). 1804 A whole section is devoted to the interesting subject of the Parisian fille de joie: Edin. Rev., Vol. 5, p. 84. 1822—3 A worthless French fille-de-joie to brave me thus: SCOTT, Pev. Peak, ch. xxviii, p. 332 (1886).

filoselle, sb.: Fr.: floss silk, ferret, program, yarn, or thread.

bef. 1605 The paragon, peropus, and philiselles may be affirmed to be double chamblets: In Beck's Draper's Dict., p. 16. 18.. she had written two orders for filoselle and one for gold thread: E. E. HALE, Fortunes of Rachel, ch. xiii. p. 131 (1884).

fls, sb.: Fr.: son. Often placed after French proper names to distinguish a son from his father.

1886 Athanas Coquerel fls does not seem to have had any great distinction either of thought or of style: Athenaeum, Oct. 30, p. 565/1.

filuca: It. See felucca.

fin, sem. fine, adj.: Fr.: refined, delicate, fine.

1833 I have seen a great deal of Bellini, who is very attractive, very 'fin,' and at same time very unsophisticated: H. GREVILLE, Diary, p. 12.

fin mot, phr.: Fr., lit. 'fine word', 'acute word': main point.

1885 The fin mot of the affair was spoken long ago by Captain Shandy: Athenaeum, Dec. 19, p. 803/1.

*finale, sb.: It.: concluding movement of a musical composition, last scene of a drama or any public entertainment, end, conclusion, final catastrophe.

1811 Often when a snarling duet had commenced, he would drop in, and produce a finale: L. M. HAWKINS, Countess, Vol. 1. p. 269 (2nd Ed.). 1814 It doubtless gratified me much that our finale has pleased, and that the curtain drops gracefully: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. III. p. 35 (1832).

1817 As soon as the finale of lady de Brantefield's sentence...would permit, I receded: M. EDGEWORTH, Harrington, ch. vi. Wks., Vol. XIII. p. 65 (1825). 1834 A few musical parties were playing the finales to Calcutta's winter: Baboo, &c., Vol. II. p. 307. 1845 Sarsfield was murdered by his own troops, a rather common finale for unsuccessful generals in Spain: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. II. p. 931.

1886 Ultimately he was stripped...of these dainty garments and hanged for his pecculations, a finale which filled Bodin with infinite satisfaction: E. B. HAMILTON, in Eng. Hist. Rev., Apr., p. 273.

finjan, finjian, finjan, sb.: Turk.: a cup or porringer of earthenware.

1612 gius vnto their friends when they come to visit them, a Fin-ion or Scudella of Coffa: W. BIDDULPH, in T. Lavender's Travels of Four Englishmen, p. 55. 1845 ordering sherbet, the pipe, coffee, and a finjan of orange-flower water: LADY H. STANHOPE, Mem., Vol. 1. ch. iii. p. 81.

*hyp. See hypochondria.

hypallagē, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ὑπαλλαγή, = 'interchange': Gram. and Rhet.: the inversion of the natural relations of two words in the syntax of a sentence, as "I set your eyes before mine woes" instead of "mine woes before your eyes". See enallage.

1589 PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., III. xv. p. 182 (1869).

hypatē, sb.: Gk. ὑπάτη (χορδή): the lowest tone in the two lowest tetrachords of ancient music.

1603 It appeareth also manifestly, by the Hypates, that it was not for ignorance that in the Dorian tunes they forbore this Tetrachord: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 1254.

hyperaesthesia, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ὑπέρ, = 'over', and αἴσθησις, = 'feeling', 'sensitivity': excessive sensibility.

1863 It was a case of "Hyperaesthesia"... or as unprofessional persons would say, 'excessive sensibility': C. READE, Hard Cash, Vol. I. p. 67.

hyperbaton, pl. hyperbata, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. ὑπερβατόν, = 'transposed', 'stepped over': a transposition or inversion of the natural order of words; an instance of such transposition.

1580 That word, a pathetical parenthesis, to encrease a careful hyperbaton: E. KIRKE, in Spens. Shep. Cal., Maye, Glosse, Wks., p. 463/1 (1869). 1589 PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., III. xiii. p. 180 (1869). 1641 if your meaning be with a violent hyperbaton to transpose the text, as if the words lay thus in order: MILTON, Animadv., Wks., Vol. I. p. 185 (1806). 1674 Interrogations, Exclamations, Hyperbata, or a disorder'd connexion of Discourse, are graceful there, because they are Natural: DRYDEN, State Innoc., Pref., Wks., Vol. I. p. 592 (1701). 1681 the Apostle is enforced to make an hyperbaton, a disturbed and disjointed order of speech: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. II. p. 3 (1861). 1886 Both Lehmann and Tyrrell give examples of the use of "hyperbaton" in the letters, e.g., 'Fam.', III. 9, 3, "tuus incredibiliter studiis delector." It is a big name for careless inversion of the words: Athenaeum, Aug. 7, p. 170/1.

hyperbola, hyperbolē, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ὑπερβολή.

1. hyperbole (q. v.).

1612 Extreme it may well bee, since the speaking in a perpetual Hyperbole, is comely in nothing but Loue: BACON, Ess., xxxvii. p. 444 (1871). 1619 Lesse then Nothing! a strange Hyperbole, a meere impossibilitie! PURCHAS, Microcosmus, ch. xxxix. p. 376. abt. 1630 He was a noble and matchless Gentleman, and it may be justly said without hyperboles of fiction... That he seemed to be born to that onely which he went about: (1653) R. NAUNTON, Fragm. Reg., p. 35 (1870).

1641 profane Hyperboles are Printed up and down of him: HOWELL, Lett., vi. xlv. p. 68 (1645). 1654 The Reward of Afflictions, is the Hyperbole of Mercy: R. WHITLOCK, Zootomia, p. 37. bef. 1658 'Tis to view him through a Perspective, and by that gross Hyperbole to give the Reputation of an Engineer to a Maker of Mousetraps: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 79 (1687).

1665 the Hyperboles that Fond Poetry bestowes upon it's admired objects: GLANVILLE, Sceptis, ch. i. p. 3 (1885). 1674 Therefore Catachreses and Hyperboles have found their place amongst them: DRYDEN, State Innoc., Pref., Wks., Vol. I. p. 591 (1701).

1709 Her Merit you have confirm'd, and her Face even in Death, without Hyperbole, is more agreeable than that of either of the two Ladies: MRS. MANLEY, New Atal., Vol. II. p. 168 (2nd Ed.). 1712 have described the Warmth of Love, and the Professions of it, without Artifice or Hyperbole: Spectator, No. 321, Mar. 8, p. 466/1 (Morley).

1788 he forgets the extravagance of Eastern flattery and hyperbole: Gent. Mag., LVIII. i. 143/1. 1811 The plain truth will seem to be | A constrain'd hyperbole: C. LAMB, Fairwell to Tobacco, Wks., p. 59. 1820 the true style of oriental hyperbole: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. xv. p. 449.

hyperborean (ἵπ- = ἡ =), adj.: Eng. fr. Lat. Hyperborei, Gk. ὑπερβόρειοι, = 'dwellers beyond the north wind' (Βορίας): pertaining to a mythical people, the Hyperborei, supposed to dwell somewhere far to the north of Greece; arctic, bitterly cold.

1633 the hyperborean or frozen sea: BUTLER, Eng. Grammar, [L.] 1729 Soon as they dawn, from Hyperborean skies | Embod'y'd dark, what clouds of Vandals rise! POPE, Dunciad, III. 85. 1886 Bodies attenuated into the ghosts of ordinary flies are what best catch the fancy of these hyperborean trout: Athenaeum, Sept. 11, p. 330/1.

hyperdulia, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Late Gk. ὑπερδουλεία: superior adoration, the adoration paid to the Blessed Virgin Mary, opposed to dulia (q. v.). Anglicised as hyperduly.

bef. 1656 From all Romish dulia, and hyperdulia, Good Lord deliver us: USHER, Anst. to Malone, p. 369. [T.] 1738 CHAMBERS, Cycl.

hypericon, hypericum, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. ὑπέρεικον: S. John's wort, any species of Tutsan.

Ionian, ionic, pertaining to the īōnes, the name of one of the four great divisions of the Ancient Hellenes or Greeks who inhabited Attica, the Ionian islands of the Aegean, and colonies on the west coast of Asia Minor in the Classical age of Greece. The (a) ionic order of architecture was especially distinguished by the graceful volutes of the capital. The (b) ionian mode in Music, was characterised in the diatonic genus by a scale formed of two disjunct tetrachords separated by a whole tone, like our major scale, the highest note of the tetrachords being a semitone higher than in the Dorian mode. The (c) ionic dialects (of Asia Minor and the Ionian islands) were distinguished chiefly by keeping consecutive vowels uncontracted and changing ā into η freely. The (d) ionic metre consisted of feet made up of a pair of long syllables followed by (Ionic a mājōre) or preceded by (Ionic a minōre) a pair of short syllables, — — —, — — —.

jacobus, sb.: Late Lat., fr. proper name Jacobus, fr. Gk. Ἰάκωβος, = 'Jacob', 'James': a gold coin of James I. of England, also called a 'broad', worth 20s. at that time.

1614 Can you lend me a Piece, a Jacobus: B. JONSON, Barth. Fair, iv, 4, Wks., Vol. II, p. 61 (1631–40). 1615 having, besides other gold, above seven thousand Jacobus pieces in specie: J. CHAMBERLAIN, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. 1, p. 370 (1848). 1663 I'll after, I long to finger these Jacobus's: DRYDEN, Wild Gallant, iv, Wks., Vol. 1, p. 54 (1701). 1694 they hid their Jacobus's, Rose-Nobles, and Ducats in the Net of their Perriwigs: J. P., Tr. Tavernier's Trav., Vol. 1, Pt. 2, Bk. 1, p. 18. 1705 five Shillings, or a Gold Quarter of a Jacobus: Tr. Bosman's Guinea, Let. xvi, p. 306. bef. 1719 I am afraid you will never be able...to persuade Eugenius and myself that it is better to have a pocket full of Othos and Gordians than of Jacobuses or Louis d'ors: ADDISON, Wks., Vol. 1, p. 258 (Bohn, 1854).

*jacquerie, sb.: Fr.: an insurrection of peasants, first applied to an insurrection in northern France, 1358. See Jacques bonhomme.

1883 It is evident that Slav feeling and agrarian feeling both excite the people, and the respectable classes are afraid of a true jacquerie: Spectator, Sept. 15, p. 1174/a. 1888 He [Scott] was never really quite out of pecuniary trouble, nor quite out of dread of a Jacquerie: Athenaeum, Mar. 10, p. 308/a.

Jacques bonhomme: Fr.: Goodman Jack, a popular name applied to any French peasant.

jacta est alea, phr.: Lat.: the die is cast. These words are said to have been uttered by Julius Caesar on crossing the Rubicon, and so entering upon civil war.

1597 Besides necessitie and this same jacta est alea hath many times an advantage, because it awaketh the powers of the minde: BACON, Counters of good & euill, p. 143 (1871). 1602 Well, howsoever it fall out, jacta est alea: W. WATSON, Quodlibets of Relig. & State, p. 239. 1609 B. JONSON, Sil. Wom., iv, 2, Wks., p. 568 (1616). bef. 1670 And this, not as Caesar upon his Army at all Adventures, with a jacta est alea, a Mum-chance, a cast of a Dye, but with the greatest Confidence, and Assurance: J. HACKETT, Atty. Williams, Pt. II, 9, p. 10 (1693).

jactance, sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. jactance: a boasting, a bragging.

1502 And in so doyng it is arrogancy, jactance and ypocresye as unto regarde of the goodes spyrytuell: A. C., Ordinarye of Christen Men, Pt. II, ch. v, sig. k 1<sup>vo</sup>.

Jagannātha, Skt.; Jagannāth, Hind., 'lord of the living', a title of Krishna, the eighth avatar of Vishnu. The idol of this deity at Puri in Orissa is occasionally drawn along in a huge car under which fanatics used often to cast themselves to be crushed. Hence, 'the car of Jagannath' (Juggernaut) is representative of any overwhelming infatuation.

1632 Jaggarnat: W. BRUTON, in R. Hakluyt's Voyages, v. 57 (1807). [Yule] 1682 We lay by all last night till 10 o'clock this morning, ye Captain being desirous to see ye Jagernot Pagodas for his better satisfaction: HEDGES, Diary, July 16. [ib.] 1727 Jagarynat...his Effigy is often carried abroad in Procession, mounted on a Coach four stories high...they fasten small Ropes to the Cable, two or three Fathoms long, so that upwards of 2,000 People have room enough to draw the Coach, and some old Zealots, as it passes through the Street, fall flat on the Ground, to have the Honour to be crushed to Pieces by the Coach Wheels: A. HAMILTON, East Indies, i. 387. [ib.] 1810 A band | Of Yoguees, as they roam'd the land | Seeking a spouse for Jaga-Naut their God: SOUTHEY, Kehama, xiii. 16. 1818 When Reason shall no longer blindly bow | To the vile pagod things, that o'er her brow, | Like him of Jaghernaut, drive trampling now: T. MOORE, Fudge Family, p. 34. 1834 holy be the place as the sanctuary of Juggunnath, it must be searched: Baboo, Vol. II. ch. xi. p. 215. 1865 Society falls down before the Juggernaut of a Triumph, but, en revanche, it always throws stones behind it: OUIDA, Strathmore, Vol. I. ch. vi. p. 89. 1883 Practical politics, that Revolutionary Juggernaut that grinds us all under its car: Standard, Sept. 3, p. 4/6.

*Jäger, sb.: Ger.: a huntsman, an attendant in huntsman's livery.

1829 supervised by his jäger, who stood behind his chair, no one could be better attended: LORD BEACONFIELD, Young Duke, Bk. II. ch. viii. p. 89 (1881). 1844 the two jäger-companies in the wood: W. SIBORNE, Waterloo, Vol. I. ch. v. p. 110. 1877 habited in a wonderful jäger costume: L. W. M. LOCKHART, Mine is Thine, ch. xxxvi. p. 307 (1879).

jaggery, sb.: Anglo-Ind. fr. Indo-Port. jagara, jagra: coarse dark-brown sugar made from the sap of sundry kinds of palm. Also called ghoor (q. v.).

1598 Of the aforesaid sura they likewise make sugar, which is called Iagra; they seeth the water, and set it in the sun, whereof it becometh sugar, but it is little esteemed, because it is of a browne colour: Tr. J. Van Linschoten's Voy., 102. [Yule] 1722 And the East-Indians extract a Sort of Sugar, they call Jagera, from the Juice, or potable Liquor, that flows from the Coco-Tree: Hist. Virginia, Bk. II. ch. iv. p. 119. 1807 The Tari or fermented Juice, and the Jagory or inspissated Juice of the Palmira tree...are in this country more esteemed than those of the wild date: F. BUCHANAN, Mysore, &c., i. 5. [Yule] 1831 She was freighted with cotton-wool and oil, from the Lachadive islands. We had also on board coir, jaggeree, ghee, cocoa-nuts, and a few cases of opium: E. A. POW, Wks., Vol. I. p. 203 (1884).

[Like sugar and sacchar-ine, jaggery is ultimately fr. Skt. çarkara.]

*jag(h)eer, jaghire, sb.: Anglo-Ind. fr. Pers. jāgīr: a tenure of land by grant or assignment of the government's share of its produce; an income derived from a grant of the government's share of the produce of certain lands; a district or tract of land from which such an income is derived.

1684 That all the Lands of the Kingdom being the Kings propriety, they are given either as Benefices, which they call Jah-ghirs, or, as in Turky, Timars, to men of the Militia for their Pay or Pension (as the word Jah-ghir imports): Tr. Tavernier's Trav., Vol. II. p. 70. 1764 The East India Company, yesterday, elected Lord Clive—Great Mogul; that is they have made him Governor general of Bengal and restored his Jaghire: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. IV. p. 204 (1857). 1803 I entirely agree in opinion with you respecting the propriety of resuming parts of the great jaghire lands as the best mode of restoring the government of the Subah of the Deccan: WELLINGTON, Disp., Vol. II. p. 897 (1844). 1826 Peeshwa had promised Trimbućkie land and a jaghire for life: HOCKLEY, Pandurang Hari, ch. xi. p. 121 (1884). — Their pensions, their profits, and jaggers, will be curtailed and regulated: ib., ch. xxiii. p. 242. 1834 What think you, of one of your collectors attaching his jagger in the face of a sun, bearing a seal of Council? Baboo, Vol. I. ch. xv. p. 258. 1841 There remained statements of accounts, there remained the reading of papers, filled with words unintelligible to English ears, with lacs and crores, zemindars and aumils, sunnuds and perwannahs, jaghires and nuzzurs: MACAULAY, Warren Hastings, p. 172 (Cassell, 1886).

BALL, Notes of a Naturalist in S. Amer., v. p. 269.

jeu, pl. jeux, sb.: Fr.: game, sport, frolic:

1813 all this was not a mere jeu of the gods, but a prelude to greater changes and mightier events: BYRON, in Moore's Life, p. 341 (1875).

*jeu d'esprit, sb.: Fr.: 'a play of wit', a witticism, a brilliant work of imagination or humor, a piece of wit.

1712 such Relaxations of Morality, such little jeux d'esprit, ought not to be allowed in this intended Seminary of Politicians: Spectator, No. 305, Feb. 19, p. 440½ (Morley). 1722 had it been a pure Jeu d'Esprit, in Painting it had been much less considerable: RICHARDSON, Status, &c., in Italy, p. 236. 1729-30 They cease to be letters when they become a jeu d'esprit: SWIFT, in Pope's Wks., Vol. vii. p. 179 (1871). 1752 It [the Ballad] is said to be a jeu d'esprit of Mr. Smarts: Gray's Inn Journal, Vol. i. p. 96 (1752). 1768 Most of the other discourses, military or political, are well worth reading, though that on Kouli Khan was a mere jeu d'esprit: GRAY, Letters, No. cxxxiii. Vol. ii. p. 114 (1819). 1779 the foregoing anecdote could of course have been only intended as a jeu d'esprit: In J. H. Jesse's Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. iv. p. 65 (1889). 1803 Those who attempt the version of lighter compositions, of songs and jeux d'esprit, are the most prone to this error: Edin. Rev., Vol. 2, p. 475.

jeu de main, phr.: Fr.: play of hand, practical joke.

1750 have no corporal pleasantries with them, no jeux de main, no coups de chambrière, which frequently bring on quarrels: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. ii. No. 2, p. 3 (1774).

*jeu de mots, phr.: Fr.: a pun, a play upon words.

metaphora, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. μεταφορά, = 'transference' (in strict Lat., translatio): metaphor, a metaphor.

1603 Fit Epithets, and fine Metaphorae: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Babylon, p. 341 (1608).

metaphrasis, sb.: Gk. μετάφρασις: translation, a change of diction from one language to another, or one style to another, without change of meaning.

bef. 1568 Metaphrasis is, to take some notable place out of a good Poete, and turne the same sens into meter, or into other wordes in Prose: ASCHAM, Scholemaster, p. 151 (1884). 1603 as for thy tongue, it ministrerth some rhetorical figures, catarches and metaphrases, songs, musical measures and numbers: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 984.

metastasis, sb.: Gk. μετάστασις, = 'removal', 'change': Rhet. a transference of the matter in hand from the actual conditions to hypothetical conditions; Pathol. the change of one substance into another; the production of local disease in the body by disease in a separate part of the body.

1589 Metastasis, or the fitting figure. or the Remoue: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., III. xix. p. 240 (1869). bef. 1691 nature will, in spite of remedies, make a metastasis of the peccant matter: BOYLE, Wks., Vol. II. p. 240. [R.] 1783 in the gout, the pain...is not the principal disease, but a critical metastasis, in order to its cure: W. SAUNDERS, Red Persw. Bark, p. 161.

metathesis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. μετάθεσις, = 'transposition': (a) the transposition of sounds or combinations of sound in a word; (b) a change, a vicissitude.

b. 1705 What a metathesis is this, that he who perhaps was born of royal blood, and kept company with kings and princes, shall now cry out with Job "to corruption, thou art my father; to the worm, thou art my mother and sister": GREENHILL, Art Embalm., p. 105. [T.] 1890 The suggested metathesis kiriyka to kirikyka does not recommend itself strongly: Athenaeum, Feb. 15, p. 208/2.

*métayage, sb.: Fr.: the métayer system of land tenure.

1888 There [Italy], as in France, métayage produces excellent results, and it would certainly seem that the best direction which land reform can take in this country is the creation...of peasant tenancies: Athenaeum, Dec. 6, p. 799/2.

*métayer, sb.: Fr.: a farmer who holds land on condition of paying to the owner a certain proportion (generally half) of the produce, the owner generally furnishing stock and plant, or a part thereof.

1804 The system of rural economy in Hindustan closely resembles...the métayer system: Edin. Rev., Vol. 4, p. 321. 1828 several of his men were in the farm-house of the honest métayer Pierrot: Engl. in France, Vol. II. p. 180. 1883 In Tuscany...the developed métayer system may rank in advance of most systems [of land tenure]: Athenaeum, Sept. 8, p. 301/1.

*metempsychōsis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. μετεμψύχωσις, = 'transit of the soul': the transmigration of a soul from one human or animal body into another; the Pythagorean doctrine, also held by Brahmins and others, that souls inhabit a successive series of human or brutish bodies. adopting a mezzo termine, a middle measure: SCOTT, Bride of Lammermoor, ch. xxii. Wks., Vol. 1. p. 1047 (1867). 1841 the misery of the mezzo termini in the journey of life, when time robs the eyes of their lustre: LADY BLESSINGTON, Idler in France, Vol. II. p. 84.

mezzo-caldo, s.b.: It., 'half-hot': a kind of rum-punch, part of which is taken cold and the rest made hot by the addition of boiling water.

1854 After dinner we go and have coffee and mezzo-caldo at the 'Café Greco' over the way. Mezzo-caldo is not a bad drink; a little rum, a slice of fresh citron, lots of pounded sugar, and boiling water for the rest: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. I. ch. xxxv. p. 408 (1879).

*mezzo-soprano, s.b.: It.: moderate soprano, a voice of a compass between that of a soprano and that of a contralto or alto (qg. v.). See soprano.

1885 Madame Hélène Hastreiter...possesses a very fine mezzo-soprano voice: Athenaeum, Oct. 17, p. 512/3.

\*mezzo-tinto, It.; mezzotint ( $\angle = \angle$ ), Eng. fr. It.: s.b., also attrib.: 'half tint'; a process of engraving, in which first of all the whole surface of the copper plate is roughened by raising a multitude of minute points upon it, after which the roughness is lessened or removed in the lighter parts of the engraving, the effect produced offering sharp contrasts of light and shade; an engraving produced by the said process.

1660 Prince Rupert first showed me how to grave in mezzo tinto: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 364 (1872). 1764 I do not send my print...doubling a mezzo-tinto...spoils it: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. IV. p. 223 (1857). 1776 Her back-ground, her mezzotints, and her clare-obscure were charming: J. COLLIER, Mus. Trav., p. 30. 1787 The Mosaic of the floor...was improved and finished by BECCAFUMI in 1500, who made use of yellow marble as a mezzotinto: P. BECKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. I. p. 437 (1805). 1800 there is a mezzotinto taken from it by Faber: J. DALLAWAY, Anecd. Arts Engl., p. 474 note. 1845 The sky...appeared like a mezzotinto-engraving: C. DARWIN, Journ. Beagle, ch. xv. p. 329. 1854 not a bad mezzotinto engraving: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. I. ch. xi. p. 139 (1879). 1864 a big mezzotint engraving: G. A. SALA, Quite Alone, Vol. I. ch. viii. p. 132.
